The assassination of Carey, the Irish informer, was cold-blooded murder, not to be excused on any ground. But it was the step into the cars, and the squaws and their trembling very thing that Carey had helped to plan for others, and he liyed long enough to see the fruits of his bloody work. He was so far on the inside of the conspiracy to "remove" the representatives of the Crown in Ireland that he was able to give away the whole plot and bring to the gallows the men with whom he had acted. English blood or Irish blood, it was all the same to Carey. He consulted his own interest alone. He was bold enough to go into s job to murder Ekglishmen; coward enough to turn informer and reveal the excess the relative so freed for the consultation of the gallows the men with whom he had acted. It must be confessed that their manner of going about it is heoric, though by no means to be admired. Conscience in time would have killed Carey, but that was too slow a process for the avengers. All things considered this is the least remarkable chapter in the bloody history of the

In four years of protection in Germany wages in the iron and steel industry have increased nearly twenty per ceut., and the increased nearly twenty per cent., and the There has been some increase in the cost of living, for more people at work earning better wagos will always increase the demand; but house rent is no higher and the working classes are well pleased with the change. There is a general improgement in their condition. Mr. Ossan makes this very pertinent remark: "True, the prices of anything, excepting black bread, mattered little to the 33 per cent. of men who were employed and nearly starving during the free-trade regime."

Frae traders are in the habit of keeping in the background the vital truth that low prices are of little interest to men who have money to buy the cheap commodities. We hear a great deal about the cheaper number of workers thirty three per cent.

We hear a great deal about the cheaper We hear a great deal about the cheaper living in England, to say nothing of Ireland, where free trade has blighted the industries of a whole people. Yet Englishmen are glad to come to this land of protection, glad to pay American prices, well knowing that work is to be had here, and that a day's work in America buys more than a day's work in England. This is the standard to measure by, and this is the conclusive test.

The Loke.

The May 12 its about three months old. On May 12 its population numbered 12 persons; on July 12 it had 520 citizens. At this time David City is the liveliest place in Dakota. It has two hotels, two banks, ten newspapers and twenty-two saloons. The houses are built upon blocks of wood or stumps of trees. Around the town are scattered the white, sun-bleached bones of thousands of buffaloes. At 9:30 in the evening daylight still streams in through the roofs of turf and at midday in July it is often cool enough to wear an overcoat.

expiated his offense on the gallows is a hero beside Carey, and every honest man instinctively knows why.

Carey's tate is what was to be expected. It would have been the unexpected if he had been allowed to live six months out of England. The movement to which Cavendish and Burke fell victims is not dead. All who were in it have not been brought to light. There are men enough to follow every Carey to the ends of the earth and make him pay the penalty. They realize that they can not afford to let informing become a safe and profitable industry in Ireland, and they will always do what they can to check it.
